

NinjaOne Research Reveals that Most Gen Zers Prefer the New Remote Work World

But when entering the workforce after college, they also demand the right tech and IT support from employers

“Companies that want to attract and retain top new talent must take notice and provide a simple employee onboarding process and the technology that GenZ workers need to do their jobs effectively wherever they are working from.”

Shay Mowlem,
NinjaOne's Chief Marketing and Strategy Officer

55%

of Gen Z graduates in the Class of 2023 prefer hybrid or remote work.

Big Turnoffs

51%

would quit a job if it didn't have the right IT infrastructure for remote, hybrid or traditional office environment.

38%

said that one of the biggest roadblocks to finding their dream job is working in an office five days a week.

Big Asks

94%

say a positive IT onboarding experience is important.

92%

expect to work at a company that provides immediate and effective support to productivity challenges.

90%

say that they are comfortable having IT admins remotely work on their computer while they are working remotely.